BLACK HERITAGE CONFERENCE SATURDAY AT U. LOWELL

LOWELL, MASS. - A daylong Black Heritage Conference is planned for February 10, at the University of Lowell as part of the Black Heritage Month program in the 1979 Ethnic Symposia Series. The event is open to the public for a $3.50 registration fee which includes lunch. Registration is in Weed Hall, on the University's south campus from 8:00 - 9:00 AM.

Judge Margaret Burnham, newly appointed judge of the Boston Municipal Court is keynote speaker. Four workshops are scheduled for the day: "The Challenge of minority business enterprises in the 1980's," "The poetry of Langston Hughes set to music", "Is being a minority hazardous to your health - yesterday and today?" and "Reaction, action, and Interaction: formula for success".

Following registration is a general assembly, with the first two workshops from 10:00 - 11:30 AM. "The Challenge of minority business enterprises" features three panelists: Dr. Lacelles Anderson of Harvard Graduate School; Dr. Ernesto Sands, economics department, University of Lowell; and Theodore Wilkins, president of Unity Bank & Trust in Roxbury. Moderating the program is Dr. Joseph Rocha of the University of Lowell management department.

The second workshop, "The poetry of Langston Hughes set to music", is a performance by Dr. Rawn Spearman of the College of Music at Lowell.
